

Letter to the Next President

Dear Mr. President:

Your election could be one step towards building a greater future, not only for the United States of America but for the world. You may already know who you are and where you're heading, but before I continue, let me ask you a soul-to-soul question:

If you stick your finger in ketchup, is your finger the ketchup?

What if you stick it in crème au chocolat at the Elysées Palace?

No, your finger is neither the chocolate cream, nor the ketchup. No matter where you stick it, your now sticky finger will remain the finger. Right?

Now, what if this finger were an entity, or soul, and it penetrated a field of data or culture in France? Would this entity be French?

What if this same entity decide to enter another field of data made of hamburgers, Coke, baseball, etc. and swam for the rest of his life in the vast ocean of data made in America. Would this entity be American?

Again, no. Hamburgers, Coke, baseball, frogs, wine, croissants, café, are all data recorded in the information bag or the subconscious mind of the entity, and they look like this: 001101010111100010 ! Hence, a soul entering a field of data is not the data. Medical studies have shown that data can be completely eradicated through brain injuries or amnesia, but the entity or person still functions.

So, if this entity is you – who the bleep are you?

Are we just creatures with a pair of legs, eyes, ears, hands, and feet waddling through fields of 001101010111100010? We are not French, American, African, nor Chinese – even if we happen to live in China, are hooked on rice and dumplings and speak fluent Mandarin.

So the question again is: Who the bleep are you?

We may think we are Jews, Arabs, Blacks, Caucasians, Hispanics, Russians, Irish, Greeks, Georgians, English, Spanish, Mongolians, Turks, or a hundred other different names given to these information bags. In fact, there are only two types of information that we all carry around with us in our bags – information that works, and information that does not work.

Look at it this way: whether it's a black cat, a white cat, or a brown cat, the cat that catches the mouse should be the cat that you ought to keep. Hence, keep the belief systems that work for you and make you feel good. Those that create fear, resentment, frustration, anger, or vulnerability should be deleted. If we all did this we'd have a better human subconscious computer to work on.

If we understand that all philosophies, cultures, or perceptions, are nothing but a series of 00110101011100010s we will have discovered freedom. Now, how should we use this freedom to create a greater future? And where are we heading?

Don't forget, I'm just a dust-kicker who is still learning. As Socrates said: All I know is that I know nothing. Well, I'm happy to say that you and I are one tiny step ahead of Socrates. We know that he knows nothing!

So when you are elected, you will be able to perform a lot better than Socrates and help get us out of the mess we're in and into a new era of world peace and prosperity.

Good luck – though you don't need it!

Warmest regards,

Dan Low
